Ruth Lilly Visitors Pavilion

Designed by Marlon Blackwell Architects, the Ruth Lilly Visitors Pavilion serves as the cornerstone of the park and is one of the region's signature architectural landmarks. The form of the building takes inspiration from the structure and geometry of a fallen, folded leaf. The interior space is surrounded by glass on three sides in addition to the skylight ceiling above, allowing visitors to maintain a powerful connection to the natural world around them. The building provides a versatile gathering and education space, restrooms and emergency services. Carefully sited and constructed in the woods of 100 Acres the ADA accessible building is a destination for park visitors, accessed by the park's network of pedestrian Landscape Journeys. Miller House

One of the country's greatest examples of mid-century modern residences, Miller House was recently acquired by the Indianapolis Museum of Art. Located in Columbus, IN (just 50 minutes south of Indianapolis) the Miller House opened to the public in 2011. Private meals are available in this historic Saarinen home overlooking Kiley's 14 acres of landscape. A private tour of the home, including access to the garden, can be the prelude to lunch or dinner for up to 10 guests. Post-meal conversation can be hosted in Girard's conversation pit, the center of the Miller's extraordinary living room. Limited Availability.
